Share your culture at the library

our colleague in our enclosed glass display case next to the children's room. This display case is specifically dedicated to exhibit items from collections that our patrons own. In the past, we've displayed a variety of personal collections such as baseball cards, political and pop culture pins, bells, gingerbread houses, crystals, minerals and bracelets, dolls and many others. It's seems fitting that in the town like West Orange we would use this opportunity to offer its residents a chance to share their personal story through items that they or someone in their family brought with them when they came to America. It's also fitting for the library to be the place that provides this opportunity.

So, I would like to invite you or anyone you know who might be interested in this opportunity, to take a walk down memory lane and go through your family items to see if you have a collection of any sort. We look forward to you bringing your ideas to the library. If you are interested, visit the library to fill out a slip with your name, phone number, email and the description of your collection. You will find these slips on the top of the glass display case next to the children's room. After the slip is filled out, deposit it through the slot. Please understand, however, that we are unable to accommodate everyone's submissions, and we will reach out to those whose collection we find the most suitable for our display at the time. With that being said, we encourage everyone to share a piece of their story with us.

I would like to think that the idea of our library as the repository of many different resources, educational and cultural ones, will appeal to many of you and that you will help us make the library an even more exciting place to be.
